Cheryl Buell

Bio

Cheryl Buell grew up in a small town in central Arkansas, but later moved to the even smaller town of Winslow, Arkansas, where she still resides to this day. She studied manual art therapy and has worked almost exclusively in clay for 45 years. She has also studied at La Meridiana International Center for the Ceramic Arts in Tuscany, Italy, and has participated in workshops in Santa Fe, New Mexico. She specializes in functional art and sculptural pieces that are designed to tell stories and evoke questions.

Artist Statement

I express myself through clay; although, often, the clay has its own idea about how it wants to be presented and I have to get out of the way. I work in clay because it calls to me, it pushes and pulls me like a current. It connects me to my surroundings and allows me to tell stories without words. For as long as I have been working in clay, it continues to excite me, challenge me, and keep me on my toes!
