Artist Statement

In my studio practice I look to embrace the vulnerability and preciousness of a drawing and object as an exploration of play and curiosity. A balance can be found by engaging serious and playful motivational states while making. I work to explore the liminal space between the two. This way of making shifts between having a set goal for the finished drawing and an open-ended exploration where the end product is no longer the set goal but rather the pleasure and accomplishment that comes from the application of each mark. Play is an important part of life and an equally important part of making.
