Bio

Sarah Graves, a watercolor artist based in Fayetteville, Arkansas, started exhibiting her art in 2020. Her work has been shown both regionally and abroad. Her signature style is characterized by the controlled chaos of dripping paint and splatters. Sarah looks to the fluidity of watercolor as a form of therapy. By intentionally omitting certain details, she allows the spirit and mood of the work to shine through. When she's not painting, she enjoys exploring and finding inspiration outdoors.

Artist Statement

When I create a painting, I want the viewer to feel a connection to the natural world and to ourselves. Societal norms, complexities, stigmas, misconceptions, and expectations regularly cloud our vision. I aspire for my paintings to serve as a refuge, offering respite from these burdens, and bring a renewed appreciation for the beauty in life, which can fade amidst the chaos. For me, nature and expression accomplish this. When I paint, I disconnect from the noise and into a world of beauty, serenity, and wonder. My goal is to provide a therapeutic experience for viewers in much the same way creating art provides for me.
