Bio

Shay Holloway is a self-taught acrylic painter from Des Arc, Arkansas. She paused her studies in academia after a BA in Psychology and Criminal Justice from the University of Arkansas to explore her creative interests. Her fascination with psychology and color psychology is the foundation for the use of color in her art. Since 2019, Shay's work has been featured in Europe, the Walton Arts Center, and she has partnered with Northwest Arkansas organizations that include Crystal Bridge's Museum of American Art and the Fayetteville Public Library for art initiatives. Her pieces are found in both private and public spaces across Northwest Arkansas.

Artist Statement

My artistic practice is rooted in exploration and constantly pushing my artistic boundaries related to different styles, mediums, and subject matter. As an artist, I am drawn to the freedom of being able to express myself through a variety of forms and techniques. This allows me to experiment and evolve in my craft, never limiting myself to one particular style or subject matter.
