Artist Statement

The political climate in our country during the beginning of the pandemic left me with no choice but to create. My heart raced and hands shook as the death count rose... each life lost unnecessarily was like a stab in my heart. I picked up a needle and thread for the first time in my life and began to stab old postcards and photos, sewing on them while the pandemic raged on. The sound of thread through thick paper and the occasional pricked finger was comforting. These works completed during quarantine are sometimes political, sometimes whimsical; but are always an effort to bring new life, energy and memories to otherwise discarded images. The pandemic no longer rages, but my need to create carries on.
